Carluke is the largest town in the Clyde Valley, set on a high plateau overlooking the River Clyde, in the heart of Lanarkshire's renowned fruit-growing region. Perfectly placed for easy access to the M74, M8 and M80 to all main cities, along with a frequent rail service to Lanark, Motherwell and Glasgow from Carluke railway station.

The origins of Carluke's name are uncertain, though it likely comes from Eglis Malouc – the church of St Malouc, a Celtic saint connected to Lesmahagow and St Malo in France.

For centuries, Carluke remained a small settlement, with a population of just 380 by the late 1700s. Weaving was the main trade until it declined with the rise of mining and industrialisation.

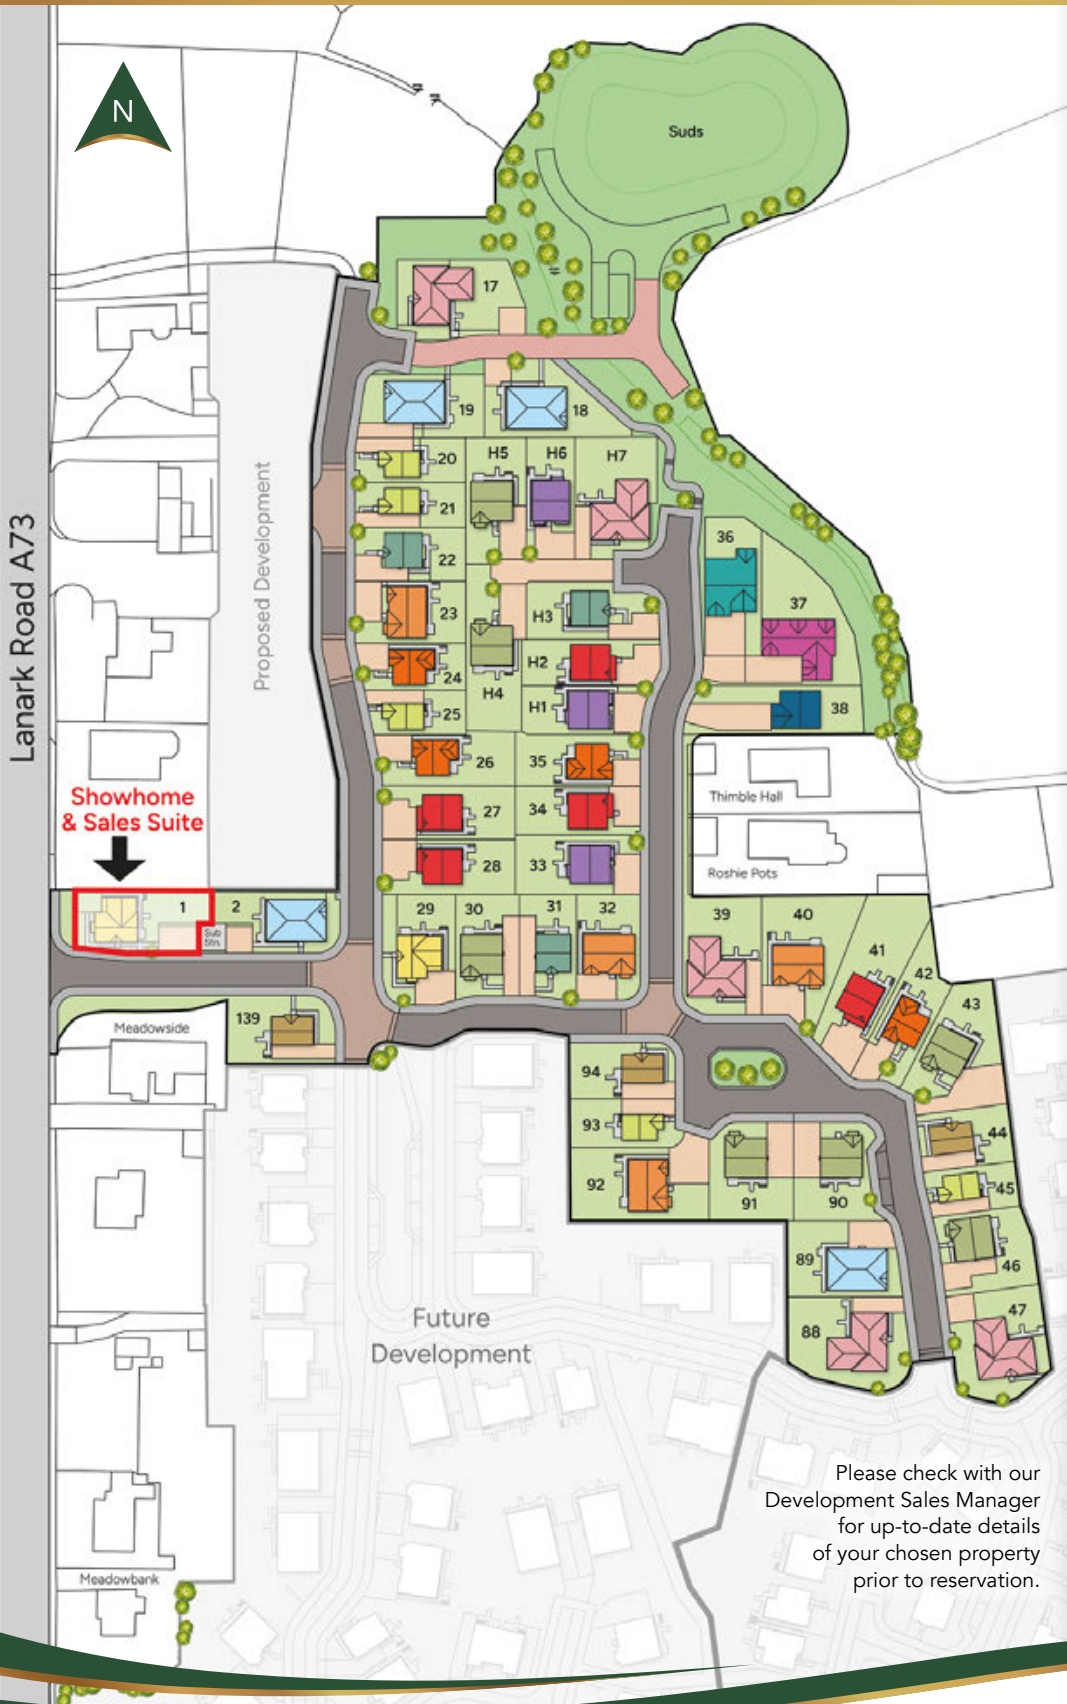

Today, Carluke is home to around 13,000 people and sits in the heart of Lanarkshire's fruit-growing region. Its location near the Clyde Valley's orchards supports one of its key employers – a well-known jam producer.

The town offers a modern leisure centre and the John Cumming Stadium, where Carluke Rovers FC play. A town centre redevelopment in the early 2000s introduced new shops, a shopping centre, cafés, and restaurants. Two memorials in the town honour Major General William Roy, founder of the Ordnance Survey, and Dr. Daniel Reid Rankin, a notable 19th-century geologist and palaeontologist.

Building Quality Homes for Over 40 Years

Allanwater Homes is a family-owned business with over four decades of experience in the building trade. Established in 1980 in Bridge of Allan, Stirlingshire, we began by transforming older properties into modern apartments before expanding into light industrial, commercial and healthcare developments.

In 2007, Allanwater Homes was created as part of the Allan Water Group, giving our residential projects a clear identity. Led by Managing Director David Stirling, we are proud to be known as an honest, transparent, and customer-focused regional housebuilder.

Today, we continue to grow across central Scotland and beyond, designing and building energy efficient homes that combine stylish exteriors with quality interiors.
